Woof! The Columbia University Computer Music Facility

presented by
Brad Garner, Rick Bassett, Mara Holmuth
Music Department, 703 Dodge Hall
Columbia University
New York, NY 10027

ABSTRACT

Possibly the best thing a studio report can do is to try to convey a sense of what the studio is "like" - the flavor of the environment, a feeling for the people working at the facility. With this in mind, a group of composers, researchers, and students working on "woof!" (our main computer) put this report together in an attempt to capture the spirit of cooperative anarchy that surrounds the Columbia University Computer Music Facility.

We organize ourselves freely. Why omit obvious features? We'll only obfuscate facts. When overblown outrages flourish, we originate other forms. Were only ordinary flaws with openly offensive facades witnessed, our outlines finally would outdistance our fixed words. One outcome from world outreach (also forgone) would obviously only finish when ostensibly obscene figures win over outlaws. Finally, we outlast oligarchs filled with overly orthodox feelings.

What overdone, overwrought favor will outdo "open" fields? Will other outlandish factors wait? Only our failures work openly. Over fortified waters old oil flows. Wisely, our overriding fate works only opposite false wishes. Obviously, others flee. Whatever open opinions form within our own fiery walls, only one feature will outdo others. Frequently, whitewashed objects observed fearfully while outside our flame-of-reference, were objects of fundamental weakness. Once our flame withers, opinions orient freely. Wild o المستrophas form windows of overstated fusion, wanting only one face.

While others only flatter whoever oozes obscure fancy words, our observations find ways of opening fresh wounds. Onward, over fences -- while others originate formulas, we oppose outright fatuous words of old-fashioned whims; open-ended outspokes former words, ourselves outlaws... friends. We oppose oppression for we optimize opportunity.

Finally, when obesity occurs for wielding antilogical opinions, freedom will overly outdistance facts. Where "original" or future wisdom obscures our feelings, we ordinarily obstruct friends who object (often fervently) with our own, from wearing out our breath.

contribute to this paper include:

Kiry Braxton (kiry@woof.columbia.edu)
Jay Handley (jayh@woof.columbia.edu)
Doug Chalmers (doug@woof.columbia.edu)
David Friedler (davidf@woof.columbia.edu)
Chadre Paine (chadre@woof.columbia.edu)
Roger Reid (roger@woof.columbia.edu)
Allen Shields (allr@woof.columbia.edu)
Hara Skibell (hara@woof.columbia.edu)

ICMC GLASGOW 1990 PROCEEDINGS
412